For sustainable development to be achieved, links between the environment and development must be examined. It is also important to consider the end point of development: human well-being. The evolution of ideas on development has made the concept of human well-being central to the policy debate. Human well-being is the outcome of development. Human well-being and the state of the environment are strongly interlinked. Present state, status and applications of research in chemistry, establishing how environmental changes have impacts on human well-being, and showing the importance of environment for human well-being, are among the core objectives of this proposed seminar. Chemistry exerts an enormous influence on human action and is thus inextricably intertwined with the forces that guide human action, especially ethics and certain forms of passion. Such passions are neither vacuous nor disorienting. Rather, they are forces that are fully capable of directing chemists toward research that really matters to each and every human being living and to come. Peoples ability to pursue the lives that they value, is shaped by a wide range of instrumental freedoms. Human well-being encompasses personal and environmental security, access to materials for a good life, good health and good social relations, all of which are closely related to each other, and underlie the freedom to make choices and take actions. Increasing the real opportunities that people have to improve their lives, require addressing all these components. This is closely linked to environmental quality and the sustainability of ecosystem services. Therefore, an assessment of the impact of the environment on individuals well-being can be done by mapping the impact of research in chemistry and industrialization on the environment and living-beings. Building better communities through...
