Excerpt from Education, Vol. 38: A Monthly Magazine Devoted to the Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature of Education; September, 1917-June, 1918 In this day of so-called standardized mental tests, I may be considered iconoclastic in stating that in the matter of the mental examination not so much depends upon the method of testing employed as upon the individual equation of the tester. It is upon his interpretation of all the collected data, and the almost intuitive recognition and selection of essentials that the proper evaluation of psychic factors, with their complex physical interrelations, rests. For purposes of classification, for rapid or routine determination of approximate mental capacity, such tests are indispensable. The surest knowledge, however, is gained through prolonged observation of the child's reaction to a given environment, his adaptability to new problems and conditions, aided by such tests. As the experience of the examiner may select. In private practice I make it a rule in all except evident cases to give nothing except a tentative Opinion without at least a three months period of such study and observation. It not infrequently happens that I find it necessary to revise early impressions almost completely and to differ radically with the snap-diagnoses of previous observers.
