Excerpt from An Address Delivered Before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society: On the Celebration of Their First Anniversary, September 19, 1829 Gentlemen of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, - The history of Horticulture is co-extensive with that of the human race. The first movement towards civilization is evinced, in the cultivation of the soil; and a garden is the incipient type of extended agriculture, and of flourishing empires; the wild and erratic pursuits of the savage, are exchanged for the local and quiet avocations of the husbandman; the arts and sciences are gradually developed, and rendered subservient to the wants of society: but in the progress of intelligence and refinement, those which were earliest called into existence, although expanded and rendered universal, to meet the demands of an increased, and condensed population, are the last which are perfectly matured. All the others must, previously, have approximated towards perfection. It is then, that the grand results of their united application are manifested, in the variety, number, utility, and beauty of the products of rural industry; and that the conveniences, comforts, and enjoyments of life are fully realized, by the triumphant labors of the accomplished horticulturist. The imperious demands of man are food, raiment, and shelter. These are furnished by the harvests, herds, and flocks of agriculture, and the toils of the mechanic.
